France has historically declared that the three pillars of civilization are wine, silk and olives (mostly for oil). The Pot Lyonnais came about because of two of these luxury goods: wine and silk, and the center of both of these industries was the city of Lyon, France's fabled end of the Silk Road.

In the 17th century the French were the undisputed masters of making fine silk fabrics. This industry needed for a lot of skilled labor to create these fabrics. In a true French fashion the "Canuts" or silk weavers were entitled to receive 50cl of wine every week paid for by their employer. The Canuts received their 50cl of wine in a glass bottle which was poured from a liter bulk container and became known as the Pot Lyonnais.
